Social and Personal

Fragrant white flowers, lighted candles and palms decorated the altar and chancel of the Grace Street Presbyterian Church last evening at 8:30 o'clock for the marriage of Miss Mary Penelope Chalmers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Ferguson Chalmers, to Thomas Croxton Gordon, son of James H. Gordon. Standards of white chrysanthemums, caught up with white satin ribbon, were used to mark the ends of the pews, and the church organist played the wedding music rendering a short program during the half-hour the guests were assembling.

The bride's wedding gown was an exquisite affair of white satin brocade finished with tulle, and her bouquet was a shower of lilacs of the valley and pink orchids. She entered the church with her father, preceded by five bridesmaids, Misses Isabel B. Carter, Elizabeth P. Cooke, Elsie W. Harrison, Ella W. Buck and Miss L. Lindzey, and Miss Eleanor Welch. Patrick was her cousin's maid of honor. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Walter L. Linde, assisted by Rev. W. Ham Meade Clark, pastor of St. James Episcopal Church.

W. Douglas Gordon was his brother's best man, and the groomsmen were Edward M. Peake, of Pittsburgh, Pa.; James Gordon Smith, W. Brakine Burton, Stuart G. Christian and E. Addison Reynolds. The ushers were George H. Gray, Malcolm J. Rawlings, Alfred Scott, Jr., James M. Cecil and Randolph H. Gordon. The maid of honor wore a French dress of white accordion plaited net, and carried an armful of pink roses, and the gowns of the bridesmaids were fascinating affairs of white chambray with wired tulle tutus and pink velvet girdles. They carried bouquets of lilacs of the valley.

A small reception at the home of the bride's parents on Grove Avenue followed the ceremony at the church, after which Mr. and Mrs. Gordon left for a wedding journey. The wedding is one of the most important social affairs of the early winter season, owing to the prominence of both bride and groom, and a notable gathering of guests witnessed the ceremony. Owing to mourning, the reception was a very quiet affair, and immediate relatives were present.

LORD DROGHEDA WILL BE PEER OF IRELAND

Succeeds Late Lord Dunboyne in House of Lords at Westminster.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FENENOY.

LORD DROGHEDA (whose name should be pronounced Draw-eda), has just been elected a representative peer of Ireland in the House of Lords at Westminster, in the place of the late Lord Dunboyne and will hold the office for the remainder of his days. He is a Conservative, not yet thirty years of age, spent a couple of years in the Foreign Office in London as a clerk, is married to a very pretty woman, who was Miss Kathleen Edinham Burn, of Prestonfields, near Edinburgh, and is a particular crony in England of the hereditary grand duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

The name of Drogheda is familiar not only to every son of Erin, but among racing men in all parts of the civilized world. For it was a former Lord Drogheda, that is to say, one of his predecessors in the family name, who founded the great Irish race meeting at Punchestown. He owns about 20,000 acres of land in Kildare, and a beautiful country seat, known as Moore Abbey, which has been in the possession of his family ever since the days of Queen Elizabeth. It is a grand old place, and has always been renowned for its hospitality, especially among military men, generations of whom have had occasion to congratulate themselves on its proximity to the great permanent camp of the Curragh.

The late Lord Drogheda but once—a giant—was the most delightful of hosts at Moore Abbey, but was wont to handicap his hospitality, in a way, by declining to allow anything but peerage to be burned there. Now, peerage does not throw out much warmth, nor is its aspect in the grate conducive to cheerfulness, and some amusing stories are told of how Lord Drogheda's guests were wont to bring surreptitious supplies of coal in their portmanteaux, to burn in their bedrooms, unbeknown to the owner of the Abbey. It is said that the late Lord Cholmondeley, popularly known as "Barky" when he was Lord of the Bedchamber in the First Life Guards, was caught smuggling in coal in the presence of the entire household party. Just as his portmanteau was being carried into the hall on his arrival, it suddenly burst open, and littered the coal it contained all over the carpet.

The late Lady Drogheda was as much devoted to racing and every form of sport as her husband, and, while a delightful hostess, her popularity among the aristocracy was not without the warmth of temper, combined with warmth of heart, which is a hereditary characteristic of her family, the Stuart Worleys, and of the house into which she married.

One of her oddities was her absolute refusal to submit to the kiss which the Viceroy of Ireland, until the beginning of Edward VII's reign, was compelled by etiquette to imprint on the cheek of every woman young and old, presented at the viceregal drawing-rooms and courts at Dublin Castle. Lady Drogheda was the only woman at the drawing-rooms who refused to submit to the kiss, and she was, in consequence, the lord lieutenant, and who was permitted by the viceregal authorities to contravene the etiquette of Dublin Castle in this fashion.

Young Lord Garlies, who has just come of age, is the eldest son and heir of the Earl of Galloway, who claims to be the chief of the house of Stuart, descended from a direct line from Sir John Stewart, younger brother of James V's Lord High Steward of Scotland, ancestor and founder of the royal house of Stuart, the Earls of Galloway have always insisted on retaining the old spelling of their patronymic, and the late earl, brother of the present peer, even went so far as to refuse to subscribe to a charity, which had printed his patronymic as "Stuart." On the Continent, however, the ancestral home of the Earls of Galloway, in the County of Wigton, are the ruins of the old castle of Garlies, from which young Lord Garlies, now celebrating his majority, takes his title. It occupies the site of the identical house where Robert Bruce slept on the memorable night when the pertinacious spider encouraged him to make the third and successful bid for the Scottish crown.

Lord Galloway was compelled by agricultural depression three or four years ago to sell a portion of his Wigton estates to Sir Malcolm MacEachan, an Australian multimillionaire, who has been several times Lord Mayor of Melbourne, and who is the principal partner of the great shipping firm of McAlhenny, MacEachan & Co., and the founder of a direct line of trade to Australia. The property purchased by Sir Malcolm from Lord Galloway, comprises the scene of Sir Walter Scott's "Guy Mannering," "Red Gauntlet," and "The Bride of Lammermoor," whose last resting place, indeed, is situated on the estate.

Sir Walter Scott took an old story connected with this place as the ground work of his most beautiful of novels, the original story being to the effect that Janet Dalrymple, daughter of the first Lord Stair, after having engaged herself, without the knowledge of her parents, to Lord Rutherford, a fortune teller, was by them to break her troth to him and to marry a tailor whom she did not love, David Dunzer, the younger, of Baldoon. She became insane on her wedding night, dying shortly afterwards, while David Dunzer, a droll, concealing which he refused to make any revelation, survived her for a couple of years.

The River Forth, from the most beautiful of the property, and it was at its mouth that the Wigton martyrs, in the Covenanters' days, were tied to stakes at low tide and drowned by the rising waters.

Young Lord Garlies is a British peerage, and a constant thorn in the side of the late Lord Salisbury, whose sister he had married. She rejoiced in the old-fashioned name of a woman—Arthur, which she owed to her godfather, the first Duke of Wellington. Her husband's eccentricity extended to his appearance, and, among other peculiarities, he made a point of Hopes to Resume Congressional Duties After Christmas.

Washington, Dec. 4.—Representative William C. It is understood that he will not return to his duties until after the Christmas holidays. Mr. Jones has kept as quiet as possible, for that reason, but he has remained most of the time in his apartment at the hotel where he is stopping.

Mr. Jones hopes to be well enough by the first of the coming year to handle the business which will come before the Industrial Affairs committee, of which he is chairman.
